As you are aware, the COVID 19 virus has raised numerous concerns with the World Health Organization, the CDC, the federal and local governments, and the public. These concerns have resulted in declarations of a “state of emergency”, travel bans, recommendations to avoid large public gatherings, and the cancellation of numerous events. Colleges throughout the nation have suspended classes, and, today, the World Health Organization declared the virus to be a pandemic.

As an organization that serves neonatal health care professionals, the National Association of Neonatal Therapists (NANT) must, first and foremost, take every action to protect the health of those professionals and the infants they serve. As a result, based on all information available at this time, NANT has no choice but to change NANT 10, scheduled to be held in Cincinnati on April 2 through April 4, from an in-person event to an online platform.

As a result of this difficult decision, since the event will no longer be “live,” there is no need for you to attend.

We wanted to provide as much notice of our plans as possible. As you can imagine, we are working through the numerous challenges presented by this unprecedented situation, and this may take some time. We will contact you to discuss this situation further.

Thank you for your ongoing relationship with our organization.
